

LJMU Research Online

Daly, A

Embodied Austerity: Narratives of Early Austerity from a Homelessness and Resettlement Service

<http://researchonline.ljmu.ac.uk/7254/>

Article

Citation (please note it is advisable to refer to the publisher's version if you intend to cite from this work)

Daly, A (2017) Embodied Austerity: Narratives of Early Austerity from a Homelessness and Resettlement Service. Ethics and Social Welfare. ISSN 1749-6535

LJMU has developed LJMU Research Online for users to access the research output of the University more effectively. Copyright © and Moral Rights for the papers on this site are retained by the individual authors and/or other copyright owners. Users may download and/or print one copy of any article(s) in LJMU Research Online to facilitate their private study or for non-commercial research. You may not engage in further distribution of the material or use it for any profit-making activities or any commercial gain.

The version presented here may differ from the published version or from the version of the record. Please see the repository URL above for details on accessing the published version and note that access may require a subscription.

For more information please contact researchonline@ljmu.ac.uk

<http://researchonline.ljmu.ac.uk/>

Embodied Austerity: Narratives of Early Austerity from a Homelessness and Resettlement Service

Journal:	Ethics and Social Welfare
Manuscript ID	RESW-2016-0048
Manuscript Type:	Original Article
Keywords:	Austerity, Welfare Reform, Relational Care, Homelessness and Resettlement Services, England

SCHOLARONE™
Manuscripts

Title: Embodied Austerity: Narratives of Early Austerity from a Homelessness and Resettlement Service

Abstract

The impact of austerity and welfare reform on staff in the caring services is an emerging story yet to be fully told (Benozzo and Colley 2012). This paper presents three narratives of early austerity drawn from fourteen in-depth interviews with staff of a small homelessness and resettlement service in England from 2011 to 2014. Experiences are represented through narratives of 'emerging realities', 'deletion' and 'changing relations'. The workers' stories revealed that the extent of welfare reforms and funding cuts not only impacted on the provision of services, but also on personal and professional values held by homelessness and resettlement service staff (Groundswell 2011, Scanlon and Adlam 2012). Ethics of care, as embodied ethical practice in emotional, identity and interactive work, formed the basis for relationships between staff and homeless people or those at risk of homelessness (Banks 2011). The rapidly changed funding and policy context for homelessness and resettlement services destabilised workers' self-concept as providers of relational care (Dobson 2011). Finally, a concept of 'embodied austerity' is offered from reflections on everyday experiences of austerity over time and contributes, perhaps, to a common story of workers' experiences during a period of social welfare in hard times (Banks 2016).

Keywords: Austerity, Welfare Reform, Relational Care, Homelessness and Resettlement Services, England

Introduction

This paper draws on research conducted during a period of substantial fiscal change and welfare restructuring in England. The study examined the multiple ways early austerity and welfare reforms were experienced by staff and service users of a small homelessness and resettlement support service, within a larger charity, during the period of 2011 to 2014. From 2010 the Coalition Government's response to the economic deficit created a period of great uncertainty for the community and voluntary sector as funding cuts announced in the Comprehensive Spending Review, and the implementation of welfare reforms in the White Paper Universal Credit: Welfare that Works, began to take effect (Bird 2010, Department for Work and Pensions 2010). The impetus for this research began with conversations with a Trustee of the charity, who in late 2010 expressed their apprehensions about the consequences of austerity for the community and voluntary sector that delivered homelessness and resettlement services in particular. Apprehension was raised on two fronts; the potential operational and financial impacts, and concerns about social justice regarding single homeless men. There were specific implications for staff and service users of the small project-funded homelessness and resettlement unit within the charity providing services for up to 40 single homeless men. The service was funded under Supporting People a ring fenced funding strand established in 2003 to enable Local Authorities to work through the community and voluntary sector to support very vulnerable people including those experiencing homelessness (House of Commons 2012). In 2009 a ring fence to funding under Supporting People was removed, and by 2011, crisis and social care funds for

1
2
3 homeless people were devolved to Local Authorities for use as discretionary funds
4 (Buckingham 2012). In addition, Local Authorities do not have a statutory duty to support
5 single homeless men and couples without children, as they are not considered in priority
6 need unless they are deemed to have become unintentionally homeless (House of 7 Commons 2012). Therefore, services that support single homeless men who may have 8 become homeless due to drug or alcohol problems, are less likely to be prioritised for 9 funding, putting staff at risk of losing jobs and service users with multiple exclusion factors
10 at risk of losing specific services (Dwyer et al. 2012).
11
12

13 Trustees were keen to find a way to capture impacts of austerity and welfare reforms and to 14 use the research to promote a concerned voice for social justice. This context then led to 15 the broader study, designed as a watching brief to provide a commentary of austerity, over 16 a specific time, in order to understand particular implications for homelessness and 17 resettlement services at a local level. An earlier paper focused on changing realities for 18 people accessing homeless services as voiced by co-researchers from the service user group
19 (XXXX 2012). This paper focuses on the experiences of staff involved with the homelessness 20 and resettlement service and offers perspectives on the everyday impacts of austerity and 21 welfare reform on people's work during the period 2011 to 2014.
22
23

24 Early austerity

25 The global recession in 2008/2009 had already resulted in a significant impact on budgets
26 for social services and on communities already experiencing deprivation. Tunstall and 27 Fenton (2009) revealed that reduced Local Authority budgets were directly linked to a
28 decrease in spending on public and community and voluntary sector provision of services
29 for vulnerable people, including homelessness services. Budget constraints led to significant
30 loss of jobs in local authorities, with 20 per cent of Local Authorities either making
31 redundancies, or freezing jobs. At the same time, it was reported by most councils that 32 recession had led to increased demands for social services (Tunstall and Fenton 2009).
33 Subsequently, considerable job losses and reduced funding affected the community and 34 voluntary sector that provided commissioned services on behalf of Local Authorities, with 35 75 homelessness services reported to have closed between January 2010 and March 2011
36 (Homeless Link 2011).
37
38
39

40 Analysis of year-on-year funding cuts to local authority budgets in 2011/2012 exposed a
41 variation in the distribution of cuts to Local Authority areas in that reductions in central
42 funds disproportionately affected those with greater numbers of vulnerable groups
43 (Hastings et al. 2012). Analysis of Local Authority spending power in 2011/2012 revealed
44 that the most deprived local authority in England, Liverpool, had lost 11.34% of its spending
45 power, while the most affluent local authority in England, Richmond, had only lost 0.61% of 46 its spending power (Hastings et al. 2012,15). A survey of 25 Local Authority responses on 47 management of budget retraction and social services remodelling showed two distinct 48 approaches emerging in 2010; those that intended to remodel services from universal
49 provision for vulnerable groups to targeted provision for individuals; and those that planned
50 to focus on area-based and spatial approaches to services provision (Hastings et al, 2012, 51 37-39). A survey completed by 42 Local Authorities in 2012 examined the impacts of 52 welfare reforms on homelessness services and found that while many Local Authorities had 53 an overview of welfare reforms, most felt unprepared strategically for the extent of change.
54
55
56
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 In addition, they lacked sufficient detailed information for future planning and
4 commissioning of homelessness services (Homeless Link, 2013).
5

6 Market orientated welfare systems at local level includes competitive commissioning of 7 services (Buckingham 2012). Buckingham (2012, 579-585) provides a useful typology of 8 community and voluntary sector organisations based on how they engage with 9 commissioning and contracting of homelessness services in England. Four types of 10 organisations are characterised as follows. Comfortable contractors operate a business-like 11 approach to tendering for and implementation of government contracts, and they have no
12 volunteer involvement or income from voluntary sources. Homelessness and resettlement
13 support is not a major part of their operations, and many may be housing associations.
14 Compliant contractors also adopt business-like and professional practices. Mainly charities,
15 these may have become dependent on government contracts and have proportionately
16 minimal voluntary income. Cautious contractors are those supported by multiple 17 stakeholders and have both paid and volunteer staff. They have significant voluntary and 18 charitable income raised from their own faith or issue based constituencies and additionally 19 tender for some government contracts. Community based non-contractors rely on 20 voluntary income and do not tender for government contracts but may access re-distributed
21 funds locally via health trusts and larger charities. Volunteer staff are locally organised and 22 often work from a faith, issues or values base to deliver community based services
23 (Buckingham 2012). Competitive tendering processes increasingly included requirements for 24 the provision of detailed auditing reports, target setting for reductions of street
25 homelessness and data on numbers of people moved on from temporary accommodation
26 within given timeframes, thus placing smaller cautious or community based contractors at a
27 disadvantage (Devine 2003, Bird 2010, Buckingham 2012, Homeless Link 2013).
28
29
30
31
32

33 Homelessness and resettlement support services in England

34 From 2008 to 2015 significant, upward trends in homelessness were noted during the 35 periods of recession and early implementation of austerity measures and welfare reforms
36 (Crisis 2012, Stuckler and Basu 2013). Homelessness acceptances, that is successful
37 applications for Local Authority support from people deemed to be in statutory and priority
38 need, peaked at 52,000 in 2013/2014, up from 40,000 in 2009/10 (Fitzpatrick et al. 2015). A
39 small reduction of 2 per cent in 2014/15 was reported. However, these homelessness
40 acceptances data for those in statutory priority need do not include a further 228,000
41 successful applications by in-work households for non-statutory homelessness prevention 42 and relief that was granted by local authorities in England in 2013/14 (Fitzpatrick et al.
43 2015). In the second quarter of 2015 reasons given for the loss of the last settled home
44 included the following; loss of assured tenancy, no longer able to stay with relatives or 45 friends, relationship breakdown, mortgage and rent arrears, and loss of other rented 46 accommodation (Homeless Link 2015). Homelessness and risk of homelessness remains 47 unreported in England. Men's hidden experiences of homelessness may be governed by 48 gendered assumptions, for example men's experience of domestic violence (Bowpit et al.
49 2011). Women's hidden homelessness occurs when women attempt to normalise family life
50 by staying with family or friends (Abrahams et al. 2015). It has been estimated that in 2012,
51 8 per cent of young people under the age of 25 had experienced homelessness in England in 52 the last five years (Fitzpatrick et al. 2011). Young people leaving Local Authority care or the 53 youth justice systems are particularly vulnerable to homelessness (Clapham et al. 2014, 54 Homeless Link 2014). Single homeless men and women draw on informal family and 55
56
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 community based resources and assets as a coping strategy in times of crisis (Bowpit et al.
4 2011).

5
6 Supporting People had increased the involvement of community, voluntary, charity and 7 faith based organisations in provision of homelessness and resettlement services (Dwyer et
8 al. 2012, Hastings et al. 2012). The role of homelessness and resettlement front line workers 9 is to provide 'floating support' to vulnerable individuals as a key personal contact and to 10 signpost and support people to access health and social care services. This includes 11 registering with a GP and support to attend acute medical appointments, and to access
12 specialist mental health and drug and alcohol services (XXXX 2012, Bates and Freeman
13 2014). Resettlement services include mental health and wellbeing support groups, 14 community cafes, drug and alcohol recovery support, informal education projects and 15 welfare and tenancy advice (Dwyer et al. 2012, Whiteford and Byrne 2013, Bates and 16 Freeman 2014). Smaller community and voluntary organisations, characterised as cautious
17 contractors by Buckingham (2012) may not be able access funds to offer a personalised
18 'floating support' and broader resettlement services to homeless people or those at risk of 19 homelessness. The range, availability and quality of services that aim to meet service user
20 needs beyond accommodation and work programme compliance is effectively curtailed.
21 Paradoxically in the context of neoliberal welfare reforms, this reduces rather than increases
22 diversity, choice and quality in the welfare system (Lemos and Bacon 2006, Buckingham 23 2012).
24
25
26
27
28

29 Narratives of change: the workers' stories

30
31 Findings presented here were derived from a set of sixteen interviews with staff involved in 32 the homelessness and resettlement service from 2011 to 2014. Interviews aimed to capture
33 stories of change, as it happened, during the period of early austerity in England (Bourdieu
34 et al. 1999). Representations of homelessness and resettlement service front line workers
35 and managers are anonymised and pseudonyms are used. Analysis of interviews reveal
36 three thematic narratives of staff experiences over time and are presented as follows:
37 emerging realities, deletion and changing realities.
38
39

40 Emerging realities

41 Nationally, provision of homeless services was in a state of rapid change. The period leading 42 up to the announcements of Local Authority budgets in 2011 was marked by a sense of 43 uncertainty, driven by the insecurity that provision of services and access to welfare and 44 benefits for homeless people was neither guaranteed nor consistent (Groundswell 2011).
45 Homeless Link's annual Snap Shot Survey of 2011 reported that the top issue concerning 46 organisations was funding, whilst the biggest gap in provision was for moving on or 47 resettlement services (Homeless Link 2011). News of the 2011 budget represented a severe
48 blow for the homelessness and resettlement service as staff realised the impending
49 implications of national changes taking effect locally on their existing services and for single
50 homeless people. Although significant changes to welfare funding had been on government 51 policy agendas since the recession of 2008/2009, for many organisations the reality of 52 austerity measures announced in 2010 appeared as sudden and dramatic as explained by a 53 manager:
54
55
56
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 We have to face the new reality; this is about staff, service users and services, with 4 implications for our organisation over a long time. What seemed distant policy is
5 here and now. While the Local Authority strategy was intended to shield services for 6 vulnerable people, only those people with service needs defined under a statutory
7 duty would have their needs assessed and met. (Bill, manager, 2011)
8

9
10 Local responses to the changing context by organisations providing homelessness and 11 resettlement services included sharing information about closures of local services, and 12 tentative planning for handing over services and service users to organisations that still had 13 funding (Homeless Link 2013). Despite some forward planning, one manager expressed a 14 sense of emerging uncertainty and implications for service users:
15

16 We feel a great vulnerability for our people. Where will they get services from? What 17 will happen to them? We have already stripped out the back office function to keep
18 us going and to keep the front line homeless services. We can cut back on service
19 costs etc. but we can't do that again next year. Our worst nightmare is that 20 Supporting People takes a major hit – and the people that need these types of 21 services will no longer get it. (Annie, manager, 2011)
22
23

24 The implications of budget retraction appeared as a breach in the norms of relations
25 between the State, Local Authorities and subsequently the community and voluntary sector
26 (Buckingham 2012, Bunyan 2012). The community and voluntary sector had been framed
27 since New Labour as an amenable and a largely compliant body of organisations, and best
28 able to meet the needs of people locally (Dobson and McNeil 2011, Bunyan 2012). The 29 sector legitimised its role through technical and operational skills and capacity to meet
30 targets, as comfortable and compliant contractors able to operate in a market orientated
31 welfare system (Buckingham 2012). The charity considered itself part of a group of 32 organisationally competent providers and local funding and resources seemed secure in the 33 short term at least. Access to future funding was dependent on internal responses to 34 budget retraction as explained by a manager:
35
36

37
38 There is an expectation that organisations provide viable services but on less money.
39 Existing terms of contracts and re-negotiations with local authorities are changing.
40 There was a realisation that more had to be delivered, for less money, but under the 41 same terms. (Moira, manager, 2013)
42
43

44 Deletion

45 In common with the experiences of many community and voluntary sector organisations the 46 changed external context impacted on internal contexts as services were reduced, terms
47 and conditions of staff changed and ultimately jobs were lost (Homeless Link 2011). The 48 words 'deleted' and 'deletion' circulated in conversations to describe the effect of Local 49 Authority cuts that included cancellation of contracts that were due to end, and deletion of 50 recent and new tenders before services provision began. Local experiences resonated with 51 national experiences as impacts on staffing levels reduced the quantity of resettlement
52 services and decreased the availability of networks of supports and opportunities for 53 engagement with service users (Nichols 2011, Fitzpatrick et al. 2014). The immediate 54 impact within the charity was on front line staff; reduction in their hours of employment
55 and reduction in services provided and therefore the number of people they worked with. A
56 sense of erasure and loss of professional value was expressed by a front line staff member:
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 People are not interested in homelessness and resistance to these cuts is not a
4 priority for people. Non-statutory provision leads to reduction of services to a bare
5 minimum. This leads to a further erosion and retraction of professional services. We
6 have been deleted. (Joseph, front line worker, March 2011)
7

8
9 As a mechanism to protect employment, managers positioned front line worker roles as 10 generic rather than specialist. During 2011 and 2012, seven staff were redeployed to other
11 areas of the charity in non-homelessness service roles, three staff had their hours of work
12 reduced and one staff member moved to another organisation. As explained by a manager,
13 attempts to maintain continuity of service in the context of reduced budgets involved
14 difficult decisions and impacted personally and professionally on staff:
15

16
17 We have to look at any opportunities we can develop in parallel with the potential of 18 people losing their jobs. And there are a lot of people really scared out there. We 19 will have to think more about central purchasing and trying to make savings that 20 way. I know people depend on us for an income so we have to look for alternatives
21 so that staff can be flexibly assigned to other areas of the organisation. We have to 22 be pretty creative - moving people to fill posts on an ad hoc basis. Provision of 23 services may be reduced to a basic or non-existent level if we can't finance it.
24 (Carmel, manager, 2012)
25

26
27 Expertise in floating support and resettlement services was in danger of being lost across 28 the community and voluntary sector (Bird 2010, Dobson and McNeill 2011). Working with 29 homeless people was historically aligned to the mission and values of the charity and its 30 staff. Of particular concern was that vulnerable single people with multiple forms of 31 exclusion would be unable to obtain secure tenancies and could lose out on unique 'floating
32 services' that are not available elsewhere (Dwyer et al. 2012, Fitzpatrick et al. 2015). As 33 front line workers were specifically vulnerable to reduced pay and job cuts, the charity was 34 at risk of losing knowledge and skills of staff with expertise in supporting people at risk of, or 35 with experience of, homelessness (Maguire 2012). Professional self-concept and value
36 based was felt to be eroded (Fletcher 2012, Dobson 2015). Precarious staff tenure and 37 constant policy change caused additional stress when working with marginalised groups
38 (Scanlon and Adlam 2012). A loss of professional identity and anxiety about not meeting
39 the needs of service users was noted by a front line worker:
40
41

42
43 Cuts to services means a loss of very specific expertise and we won't get that back.
44 The skill base will be diminished. Can this work be done by volunteers who don't have 45 the capacity to work with homeless people on their journey? But when people are 46 out on the streets they are extremely vulnerable and to work with them, that is a
47 skilled job. (Irene, front line worker, 2012)
48

49 Changing relations

50 Austerity and welfare reform had implications for relations between the community and 51 voluntary sector and the State. Despite the charity's ability to respond by internally
52 financing some gaps in budgets, the pervasiveness of contract and transactional cultures
53 framed discussions about ways of working. The external context required adjustments and 54 change to the nature of provision of services as explained by a manager:
55
56
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 The world has changed. If we focus on partnership, we can deliver good services for 4 people. We have to offer a specialist service to the big organisations providing
5 housing to clients like ours. We do less work with the council and we are now
6 contracted to housing associations. (Carmel, manager, 2013)
7

8
9 Changed relations with funders and other community and voluntary sector organisations
10 offering homelessness and resettlement services, driven by new contracts, resulted in 11 conflicted, embodied practice (Banks, 2011). Although staff maintained a value base to their 12 work, beyond contractual motivation, new ways of working with elements of a transactional
13 contract culture, destabilised staff self-concept of what it means to work in the community
14 and voluntary sector (Dobson, 2011). An increased focus on delivery of target driven 15 services created some doubt about the effectiveness of a business model of welfare as 16 expressed by both managers and front line staff:
17

18
19 Concomitant with a Big Society agenda is for the CVS to engage in a competitive and 20 contractual relationship with each other. Increase in rents for community based 21 premises and the levying of service charges to other CVS organisations is becoming 22 more commonplace. Organisations that offer advice, now charge say £50 for that 23 advice. If everyone has to charge for services to each other that is going to impact on 24 smaller organisations. (Annie, manager, 2012)
25

26
27 We seem to have moved into a contractual relationship with government and each
28 other. Not a facilitative relationship. The CVS has engaged in the project contract
29 culture. They get the work, they do the work, and they deliver the targets. But I am
30 not sure they provide a critique of themselves. (Veronica, front line staff, 2014)
31

32 All staff took a position as advocates for vulnerable people in dealings with the statutory 33 sector, and in wider advocacy networks (Fletcher, 2012; Renedo, 2014). The centrality of 34 care, caring for and values, was noted as a recurring theme underpinning relational work in 35 interviews. Findings illustrate how staff embodied values and strove to articulate the value
36 base of their work during austere times. In 2012 staff reflected on the continued relevance
37 of preventative work, despite prioritisation of crisis work implied by changes in statutory 38 duty as explained by a staff member:
39

40
41 Social problems can't be dealt with overnight, but it is our job to tackle them by 42 working with people to set and reach their own goals, creating a sustainable life. Our 43 work is preventative as well. We can work with people before issues become really 44 problematic by providing caring and consistent support services after they have been 45 in hostels, we help them move on and settle over time. Landlords have got used to us
46 and trust us. We prevent homelessness by ensuring people can manage themselves.
47 We break down any revolving door system. (Joseph, front line worker, 2012)
48
49

50 In 2013, staff reflected on the nature of caring services and linked their self-concept as 51 providers of relational care staff in contrast with their role as implementers of a defined
52 support package as explained by a front line worker:
53

54
55 All the team are caring people with values of their own that guide them in how they 56 work. It is client led, and about working alongside our service users. We are in the 57 background, when they are taking small steps. Our work is more community
58
59
60

1
2
3 focussed. We work on empowerment and helping people make choices. The new 4 approaches and procedures are about provision of care as a package, not care for, or
5 caring. (Irene, front line worker, 2013)
6

7
8 In 2014 staff reflected on the consequences of their changing practice for service users and 9 identified a link between loss of services and loss care, as explained by a front line worker:

10
11 It is going to be very hard. The vulnerability of the people we work with who now
12 have to engage without having an identified support worker to navigate the changes
13 in their lives and the system. Someone who helps them plan for the future and how 14 to go forward. They will feel the impact on themselves and how it affects their day to 15 day life, rather than a 'loss of service'. They will describe it as a loss of 'people who
16 care'. (Betty, front line worker, 2014)
17

18
19 All staff emphasised the value base, that promoted human dignity, as underpinning the 20 quality of their services and their relational work with vulnerable people. Front line workers 21 expressed duty of care in terms of prioritisation of human interactions with people with 22 complex needs (Renedo 2014, Abrahams et al. 2015). Managers focussed on the charity's 23 organisational compliance and expressed duty of care in terms of ensuring continuity of 24 service (Banks 2011). The community and voluntary sector needed to be seen as effective
25 provider of services, despite a challenging funding and welfare reform context (Bunyan 26 2012). Austerity shifted the emphasis in welfare from examination of structural 27 determinants of vulnerability to a deficit model of individuals (Stuckler and Basu 2013).
28 These narratives express a sense of embodied austerity as all staff struggled with the 29 challenges of the changing context of their work.
30
31

32 33 Conclusion: Embodied austerity 34

35
36 The workers' stories trace responses to austerity and welfare reforms from the eve of crisis
37 in 2011, through periods of loss and adjustment to 2014. The perspectives of staff revealed
38 that the extent of welfare reforms and austerity not only impacted on the charity's services,
39 but also on personal and professional values of homelessness services staff (Groundswell 40 2011, Scanlon and Adlam 2012, Renedo 2014). Embodied austerity is offered as an 41 overarching theme for this commentary of early austerity from the perspectives of 42 homelessness and resettlement services staff. Ethics of care as relational work is under-
43 valued during austere times and staff are positioned in conflicting and contradictory spaces
44 as they try to contend with the implications of a rapidly changing context for their work
45 (Banks 2011).
46
47

48 Embodied austerity and ethics of care

49 Austerity, Banks (2011, 2016) argues, has increased the tension between two dimensions of 50 ethical practice in social care work. Ethical practice, defined as accountability, is privileged 51 as part of new public management (Banks 2011). Ethics of care in practice, defined as 52 embodied ethics work of emotional, identity and interactive work, formed the basis for 53 relationships between staff and homeless people or those at risk of homelessness (Dobson 54 2011, Banks 2011). Ethical practice defined as ethics of care as relational work between 55 service users and key workers in the caring services is under-resourced during times of 56 recession (Banks 2011, 2016).
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 The staff of the charity, in common with many homelessness professionals in the 4 community and voluntary sector, regulated and amended their practice within an externally
5 changed market driven and audit context for their work (Colley 2012, Renedo 2014). From 6 2010 to 2014, staff at all levels of the organisation worked through a changed ethos for 7 provision of homelessness services (Banks 2011).
8

9
10 As funding became subject to of a narrowly defined statutory duty, providing continuity of 11 resettlement and homelessness services as ethical relational care conflicted with target
12 driven approaches to project funding. Resettlement services, as preventative and sustaining
13 work with homeless people, appeared undervalued externally. This created tensions for all
14 staff and they endeavoured to continue relational ways of working with vulnerable people,
15 as reflected on by a staff member:
16

17
18 We are working through some tough times; resisting, informing and creating the 19 context in which we work. (Carmel, manger, 2014)
20

21 Contradictory spaces

22 Contradictory spaces are created for front line workers in homelessness and resettlement
23 services under neoliberal welfare systems (Stuckler and Basu 2013). Banks (1998) observes
24 the direct ways a new managerialism culture changes social work practice and provision.
25 The job roles of social workers are increasingly specialised and fragmented in relation to 26 categories of social work. In addition, social and community based practice is increasingly 27 monitored in relation to throughputs, outputs and resource management, and subject to 28 performance measures, legislation and guidelines (Banks 1998, Fletcher 2011).
29

30
31 Renedo (2014) suggest that ethical practice needed for compliance and accountability
32 inherent in new partnerships and commissioning relationships, conflicts with equally 33 important ethical practice at relational level. Meeting diverse needs of service users on an 34 individualised basis may be more difficult in austere times (Renedo 2014).
35

36
37 The changed funding and policy context for homelessness and resettlement services
38 destabilised workers' self-concept as providers of relational care (Dobson, 2011). Staff were 39 conscious of the contradictions in making changes to current models out of necessity in 40 reduced circumstances, while at the same time to try to hold onto the organisations' values,
41 as expressed by a staff member:
42

43
44 What we are in danger of losing here is a sense of accompanying people and a sense
45 of social justice. This is rooted in our history. We have the ability to respond, to 46 follow a story rather than follow the funding. We need to keep faithful to people and 47 make sure we have enduring quality, although the model may change. There will be 48 internal and external changes. But we must hold onto our values. (Carmel, manager, 49 2014)
50

51 A common story?

52 In conclusion, the workers' stories presented in this paper resonate with, and may be
53 illustrative of, a common story across caring services in England during austere times
54 (Benozzo and Colley 2012). Austerity changed the nature of the homelessness and 55 resettlement service provision within the charity, a common situation reported nationally
56 (Homeless Link, 2011). The combination of cuts to Local Authority budgets and Supporting 57
58
59
60

1
2
3 People funds raised concerns about possible reductions in the availability, type and nature
4 of community and voluntary organisations involved in the provision of services to homeless
5 people and those at risk of homelessness (Bird 2010). The value of homelessness and 6 resettlement services was undermined by the erosion of funding and statutory
7 requirements for such work (Buckingham 2012). A sense of the ethical and relational caring
8 roles between staff and homeless people or those at risk of homelessness was undervalued
9 (Fletcher 2011, Limebury and Shea 2015). Criteria for commissioning has shifted towards 10 compliance, auditing and generalist provision of housing placement, rather than specialised 11 small scale resettlement or homelessness services based on personal outcomes
12 (Buckingham 2012). External and internal relations were breached mirroring the 13 increasingly conditional, compliant and transactional nature of welfare provision in times of 14 budget retraction (Bird 2010, Buckingham 2012, Whiteford and Simpson 2015). Market
15 driven approaches to welfare policy narrowly define ethics of care and practice. Inflexible
16 guidelines for practice and criteria that defines success in output and throughput targets,
17 and that are measured through auditing processes are increasing for caring services (Banks, 18 2011, Stuckler and Basu 2013). These conditions create mechanisms of social control in the 19 spheres of social welfare, employment, health, education and in community relations (Banks
20 1998, Banks 2011, Bunyan, 2012, Stuckler and Basu 2013).

21
22 The extent of the seismic changes to the social contract and potential impact of early 23 austerity and welfare reform was not underestimated in 2010 (Gelder 2011). However, the 24 rolling nature of reform and financial cuts created uncertainty and concern about the full
25 impacts on local arrangements for homelessness services and provision to come in future
26 years (Bird 2010, Gelder 2011). The speed and scale at which reform and funding cuts were 27 implemented left many in the homelessness statutory and community and voluntary sector
28 unprepared strategically and financially (Johnson and Vickery 2011, Buckingham 2012, 29 Homeless Link 2013). The capacities of the community and voluntary sector to form new 30 ways of working across new relationships continue to be tested in this rapidly changing and 31 challenging context (Vickery 2012).

32
33
34
35
36
37
38
39
40 Acknowledgements: An earlier form of this paper was presented at the Journal of Ethics and 41 Social Welfare 10th Anniversary Conference, 'Ethics and Social Welfare in Hard Times', 42 Friends Meeting House, London, UK 1-2nd September 2106. The author is grateful for 43 comments received from participants.

44 45 46 47 48 49 50 51 52 53 54 55 56 57 58 59 60

References

Abrahams, H., James, J., Powell, L., Williamson, E., Morgan, K., Cameron, A. and Henry, L.
(2015) Voices of Experiences: service users as advisors in a research project on the needs of homeless women. International Journal of Qualitative Research in Services, vol. 2 (1).
[online] Available at:
<http://www.inderscienceonline.com/doi/pdf/10.1504/IJQRS.2015.06977> [Accessed: 8th
September 2015].

1
2
3 Banks, S. (1998) Professional ethics in Social Work: What future? British Journal of Social
4 Work, vol. 28, pp. 213-231.

5
6 Banks, S. (2011) Ethics in an age of austerity: Social Work and the evolving new public
7 management. Journal of Social Intervention: Theory and Practice, vol. 20 (2), pp. 5-23.

8
9 Banks, S. (2016) Everyday ethics in professional life: Social Work as ethics work. Ethics in 10 Social Welfare, vol. 10 (1), pp. 35-32.

11
12 Bates, G. and Freeman, J. (2014) Reducing the impacts of welfare reform and recession: A
13 guide based upon evidence in Merseyside and Cheshire. Centre for Public Health: Liverpool
14 John Moores University.

15
16 Benozzo, A. and Colley, H. (2012) Emotion and learning in the workplace: critical
17 perspectives. Journal of Workplace Learning, vol. 24 (5), pp. 304-316.

18
19 Bird, E. (2010) The impact of government cuts across housing care and support on 20 vulnerable people. Housing, Care and Support, vol. 13 (4), pp. 33-36.

21
22 Bourdieu, P. and Accardo, A., Balazs, G., Beaud, S., Bonvin, F., Bourdieu, E., Bourgois, P.,
23 Broccolichi, S., Champagne, P., Christin, R., Faguer, J., Garcia, S., Lenoir, R., Euvrard, F., 24 Pialoux, M., Pinto. L., Podaydes, D., Abdelmalek, S., Soulie, C., Waquant, J.D. L. (1999) The 25 Weight of the World: Social Suffering in Contemporary Society. Polity Press. (Trans.) P.
26 Fergusson, S. Emanuel, J. Johnson, and S.T. Waryn. 1999.

27
28 Bowpitt, G., Dwyer, P., Sundin, E. and Weinstein, M. (2011) Comparing Men's and Women's 29 Experiences of Multiple Exclusion Homelessness. Social Policy and Society, vol. 10 (4), pp.
30 537-546.

31
32 Buckingham, H. (2012) Capturing Diversity: A Typology of Third Sector Organisations' 33 Responses to Contracting Based on Empirical Evidence from Homeless Services. Journal of 34 Social Policy, vol. 41, pp. 569-589.

35
36 Bunyan, P. (2012) Partnership, the Big Society and community organising: between 37 romanticizing, problematizing and politicizing community. Community Development
38 Journal, vol. 48 (1), pp. 119-123.

39
40 Clapham, D., Mackie, P., Orford, S., Thomas, I. and Buckley, K. (2014) The housing pathways
41 of young people in the UK. Environment and Planning, vol. 46, pp. 2016-2031.

42
43 Colley, H. (2012) Not learning in the workplace: austerity and the shattering of illusion in 44 public service work. Journal of Workplace Learning, vol. 24 (5), pp. 317-337.

1
2
3 Crisis (2012) Housing Benefit Cuts. London: Crisis.
4

5
6 Crisis (2015) The Homeless Monitor in England. London: Crisis.
7

8
9 XXXX (2012) From home to home: homelessness during austere times. Housing, Care and 10 Support, vol. 15 (3), pp. 109-119.
11

12
13 Department for Work and Pensions (2010) White Paper 'Universal Credit: welfare that
14 works' [online] Available at: https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/universal-credit-
15 welfare-that-works [Accessed: 5th January 2011].
16
17

18
19 Devine, J. (2003) Faith in England's North West: The contribution made by faith communities
20 to civil society in the region. Warrington: North West Development Agency.
21

22
23 Dobson, R. (2011) Conditionality and Homeless Services; 'Practice Realities' in a Drop-in 24 Centre. Social Policy and Society (Special Edition on Multiple Exclusion homelessness), vol.
25 10. (4), pp. 544-557.
26

27
28 Dobson, R. and McNeill, J. (2011) Homelessness and Housing Support Services: Rationales
29 and Policies Under New Labour. Social Policy and Society, vol. 10 (4), pp. 581-589.
30
31

32
33 Dobson, R. (2015). Power, Agency, Relationality and Welfare Practice. Journal of Social 34 Policy, 44, pp 687-705. [online] Available at:
35 http://journals.cambridge.org/article_S0047279415000318 [Accessed: 29th December 2015].
36
37

38
39 Dwyer, P., Bowpitt, G., Sundin, E. and Weinstein, M. (2012) The support priorities of multiply 40 excluded homeless people and their compatibility with support agency agendas – new 41 research into multiple exclusion homelessness. Housing Care and Support, vol. 14 (1), pp.
42 31-32.
43

44
45 Fitzpatrick, S., Jonsen, S. and White, M. (2011), 'Multiple exclusion homelessness in the UK:
46 key patterns and intersections'. Social Policy and Society, vol. 10 (4), pp. 501-512.
47
48

49
50 Fitzpatrick, S., Pawson, H., Bramley, G. and Wilcox, S. (2014) The Homelessness Monitor in 51 England 2012. London: Crisis.
52

53
54 Fitzpatrick, S., Pawson, H., Bramley, G., Wilcox, S. and Watts, B. (2015) The Homelessness
55 Monitor in England 2015. London: Crisis.
56
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 Fletcher, D. R. (2011) Welfare Reform, Jobcentre Plus and the Street-Level Bureaucracy:
4 Towards Inconsistent and Discriminatory Welfare for Severely Disadvantaged Groups?
5 Social Policy and Society, vol. 10 (4), pp. 445-458.
6
7

8 Gelder, A. (2011) Blueprint for action: a guide for clergy to support people in housing
9 difficulties resulting from housing benefit caps. London: Housing Justice.
10
11

12 Groundswell (2011). 'The Homeless People's Commission' [online] Available at:
13 www.groundswell.org.uk/hpcfllreport.pdf [Accessed: 30th September 2011].
14
15
16

17
18 Hastings, A., Bramley, G., Bailey, N. and Watkins, D. (2012) 'The December 2010 grant
19 settlement: the view from the local authorities' in Serving Deprived Communities in a
20 Recession. Alan Hastings, Glen Bramley, Nick Bailey and David Watkins (2012) York: Joseph
21 Rowntree Foundation.
22
23

24
25 Homeless Link (2011) SNAP 2011: Survey of Needs and Provision, Services for Homeless
26 Single People and Couples in England [online] Available at: www.homeless.org.uk/snap-2011
27 [Accessed: 4th August 2011].
28
29

30 Homeless Link (2013) How prepared are local authorities for welfare reform? London:
31 Homeless Link.
32
33

34 Homeless Link (2014) Young and Homeless. London: Homeless Link.
35
36

37 Homeless Link (2015) Statutory Homelessness data April-June 2015 [online] Available at:
38 www.homeless.org.uk/facts/homelessness-in-numbers/statutory-homelessness [Accessed:
39 12th November 2015].
40
41

42
43 House of Commons (2012) The Supporting People programme (Research Paper 12/40)
44 [online] Available at: http://researchbriefings.files.parliament.uk/documents/RP12-
45 40/RP12-40.pdf [Accessed: 11th November 2015].
46
47

48 Johnson, R. and Vickery, L. (2011) Two elephants in one room. Housing, Care and Support,
49 vol. 14 (1) pp.3-9. [online] Available at: <http://dx.doi.org/10.1108/hcs.2011.54614aaa.002>
50 [Accessed 6th January 2012].
51
52

53
54 Lemos, G. and Bacon, F. (2006) More than flats and job training: Supporting homeless and 55 vulnerable people to achieve social and emotional aspirations. Housing, Care and Support,
56 vol. 9 (1), pp. 29-36.
57
58
59
60

1
2
3 Limebury, J. and Shea, S. (2015) The role of compassion and 'Tough Love' in caring for and 4 supporting the homeless: experiences from 'Catching Lives' Canterbury, UK. Journal of 5 Compassionate Health Care, vol. 2 (7) [online] Available at:
6 <https://jcompassionatehc.biomedcentral.com/articles/10.1186/s40639-015-0016-1>
7 [Accessed 10th December 2015].
8

9
10 Maguire, N. (2012) Training for front-line homeless workers: practicalities and ethics of 11 teaching cognitive behavioural and dialectical behavioural psychological therapeutic
12 techniques. Housing, Care and Support, vol. 15 (4), pp. 177-185.
13

14 Nichols, V. (2011) Open Letter to the Right Honourable Ian Duncan Smith MP, Secretary of 15 State for Work and Pensions. 12th July 2011. (Researcher's copy).
16

17 Renedo, A. (2014) Care Versus Control: The Identity Dilemmas of UK Homelessness
18 Professionals Working in a Contract Culture. Journal of Community and Applied Social 19 Psychology, vol. 24 (3), pp. 220-233.
20

21
22 Scanlon, C. and Adlam, J. (2012) 'The (dis)stressing effects of working in (dis)stressed
23 homelessness organisations'. Housing, Care and Support, vol. 15 (2), pp. 74 – 82
24

25
26 Stuckler, D. and Basu, S. (2013) The Body Economic: Eight experiments in recovery, from 27 Iceland to Greece. London: Penguin.
28

29
30 Tunstall, B. and Fenton, A. (2009) Communities in recession: the impact on deprived
31 neighbourhoods. York: Joseph Rowntree Foundation.
32

33
34 Vickery, L. (2013) Editorial: Responsible austerity. Housing, Care and Support, vol. 16 (1), pp.
35 3-4.
36

37
38 Whiteford, M. and Byrne, P. (2013). Homelessness and Alcohol Outreach Nursing in 39 Liverpool. European Network of Homeless Health Workers. Vol. 17. pp. 3-5 40

41
42 Whiteford, M. and Simpson, G. (2015) Who is left standing when the tide retreats?
43 Negotiating hospital discharge and pathways for homeless people. Housing, Care and 44 Support vol. 18 (3/4), pp 125-135. [online] Available at:
45 <http://www.emeraldinsight.com/doi/pdfplus/10.1108/HCS-08-2015-0014> [Accessed: 12th
46 November 2015].
47
48
49
50
51
52
53
54
55
56
57
58
59
60

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28
29
30
31
32
33
34
35
36
37
38
39
40
41
42
43
44
45
46
47
48
49
50
51
52
53
54
55
56
57
58
59
60

For Peer Review Only